This list contains only the most select varieties lately introduced.
We never supply common seed to our customers, and endeavour at all times to live up to our high standard of quality.

One of our clients writes as follows:

"Last season I purchased from you a 7/6 collection of 18 varieties of Winter Flowering Sweet Peas. I sowed the seed in February and picked first blooms first week in August and from then to the middle of December I picked thousands of beautiful blooms, with stalks up to 18 inches long and many with four flowers on each stalk. The plants grew 10 ft. high."

HOW TO GROW SWEET PEAS

Trench the ground 2 feet deep. Good liberal mixing of old manure is essential, and a handful of bone-dust (to a yard) is very beneficial. A month's exposure of the soil to the sun should be sufficient before planting. Do not leave the manure in layers; mix it and trample down the soil. Plants do not like loose soil, except on the surface.

A sunny situation is quite necessary, for the flowers are required in the Winter months; and perfect drainage is essential—a waterlogged position turns the foliage yellow.

According to climate the seed can be sown from January to July; but we advise early planting—but several sowings could be made at later periods. The best exhibition blooms are secured from young plants.

Sweet Pea seedlings transplant very well, so that it is always advisable to have a few in boxes for refilling purposes.

Sow seed about half-inch deep, and do not overwater, as the seeds may decay. Should the seed not have germinated in 14 days, chip off a bit of the outer skin of the seed with a pen-knife to admit the moisture and swell the seed. No manure should come in actual contact with the seed; this prevents rotting.

Plant Sweet Peas nine to twelve inches apart, and stake the young plants before the winds bruise them; and the growth is always best if the plants have something to cling to until such time as they reach their permanent climbing places, such as bushy ti-tree stakes or wire-netting.

When watering Sweet Peas, remember that the moisture is required two feet down, so that mere surface watering is of no use. A light top-dressing of horse manure helps to retain the moisture, but do not smother.
